the case in detail, it was announced tonight that the commonwealth is ready to proceed with the prosecution of Thomas Pollard, real estate and insurance man, on a charge of murder in connection with the killing of Mrs.

portant witnesses for the state, and expressed satisfaction with the present status of the case. The prosecutor intimated that sensational developments may be expected when Pollard and West are arraigned.

One of the outstanding developments of the case today was the announcement by the police that they will insist upon West being tried as an accessory to the killing of the young woman. The detectives frankly say they do not believe West has told all he knows about the killing of Mrs. Richardson. The officers de-Richardson. The officers clare that West has not given them a clear story of what happened at the Pollard home on the night of the killing or of the events which preceded the visit to Pollard.

Divorce Statement.

It was learned today that the police are relying largely upon a statement made to them by Herbert C. Richardson, jr., divorced husband of the slain woman, for a solution of the case. This statement has not been made public, although the authorities admit the husband told them the story of his estrangement and subsequent divorce from his wife.

In this story, the police said Richardson fixed the blame for his domestic troubles and gave them information which they think eventually will lead to a complete solution ally will lead to a complete solution of the case.

Pollard maintained his silence to-day. He has not yet told his story of the killing, and his counsel today intimated that no word from him may intimated that no word from him may be expected until the hearing next week. Aside from the story told the police on the night of the killing and his brief examination at the in-quest Wednesday, J. Mosby West has followed Pollard's example and has declined to discuss the case. declined to discuss the case

The tall trees whisper heart to heart,
My eyes grow dim with reverence the while.
Thinking I see thee, thinking I see thee,
smile.
